The market for the summer will see high inflation in the form of energy costs in our household bills and car tax, and a decrease in the supply of goods and services due to the global supply chain disruptions. These factors will lead to a decrease in the purchasing power of consumers, which will further exacerbate the inflationary pressures in the economy. The government has implemented various measures, such as increasing interest rates and implementing fiscal policies, to address these issues. However, the effectiveness of these measures remains to be seen as they may have unintended consequences on the economy. The current economic situation highlights the importance of prudent macroeconomic policies and effective management of financial markets to ensure long-term economic stability.
